Birds of the San Bernardino Mountains

Saturday, June 2, 2012

with Robert L. McKernan, museum director & ornithologist

The San Bernardino Mountains provide birdwatchers with a wide variety of habitats and birds to study. This day-long excursion will visit the coastal slopes of the mountains, Big Bear Valley, meadow habitats near Bluff Lake, and the desert slopes.

June is the peak period for breeding birds in the San Bernardino Mountains. About 170 species have been recorded, and in early June we will still have an opportunity to observe late migrant birds moving north. The trip, which will depart from the museum in Redlands, costs $60 per Museum Association member ($70 for a non-member). The fee includes transportation, morning coffee, lunch, water, and light snacks. The day will not be strenuous, but does include walking on gravel and sand.

Meet at the museum at 6:15 a.m. We will return by about 6:45 p.m. Binoculars, hat, sunscreen, comfortable shoes, and a bird field guide are a must. Children must be accompanied by a responsible adult. Return the coupon below by May 23. Space is limited.
